OPEN THE GATES !

The Foard of Education, at its meeting next Wednesday, will announce what it intends to do in regard to opening the school gates earlier than is now done, in order that the children may not stand waiting on the street.

It seems impossible that the school au thorities can deliberately refuse to open the school gates after a proper consideration of the point. It is too clearly to the advantage of the children in every respecand so greatly to their advantage that it is hard to see how anything can be brought up as a sufficient offset to their claim.

It is cruel to keep young children waiting at the locked gates. Their delicate constitutions can so easily be impaired by the cold or the wet, to both of which they are exposed by this long vigil. The season is rapidly settling into steadily cold weather, and these children are frequently too poor to be properly protected against it by warm clothing. So the point cannot be settled too soon.

evils. They are simple facts. The city in undertaking to educate these young children necessarily assumes the care of them during the hours of instruction. Is it fidelity to this duty to force them to shiver at the gates and be exposed to such danger as young unguarded children are open to on the streets?

It does not seem as if any sufficient reason could be proposed to the Board of Education which should lead to an adverse decision on this point.

A roung man of independent income and successful business position blew out his brains yesterday at his club-house. The only reason that has been assigned for the act is that of ill health or disgust of life. Such a self-destruction has more than the wonted horror of suicide in it. With everything apparently to make life pleasant he found it unendurable, and fittingly left it, attired in evening dress. It is a melancholy commentary on the lack of motive for fortitude in this Nineteenth Century.

The President reached Indianapolis early Sunday morning. He attended church and shook hands with people in front of the sacred edifice. Then be went home to dinner, and in the afternoon shook hands again with many callers. shook hands again with many callers.
